Jim Hines

Jim Hines worked for The Louisville Cardinal from 1986-1990 in roles including Managing Editor and News Editor. During his time at the University of Louisville's independent student newspaper, he oversaw its transition from the cut and paste era to desktop publishing.

After The Cardinal, Hines took what he learned and applied those skills at The Courier-Journal until 2009. In roles ranging from Copy Clerk to Copy Editor to Page and Ad Designer to Prepress Management, Hines learned the operational side of print media culminating as Director/Information Technology.

After The C-J, he joined the Dow Jones Local Media staff in Middletown, NY where he oversaw the construction of a central production facility in New Beford, MA and traveled the country consolidating ad production. Moving to Dow Jones' corporate staff in East Rutherford, NJ, he oversaw modernization projects and cost control projects.

Kentucky called him and after a brief stint with Blue Equity, he followed his wife to GateHouse Media, in Rochester, NY. Initially overseeing the Community Publishing Standardization Initiative, he was tapped to run GateHouse's growing Merger & Acquisition division.

When Gannett and GateHouse merged, he took skills he'd learned to the vendor side, working with Naviga Global and now BLOX Digital, as a Product Manager.
Hines lives with his now retired Publisher wife, Anna and their German Shepherd, Kody in Louisville.